I've been involved as a graphic designer for London Village Network (LVN) a local grass roots charity, designing flyers, banners and logos. ### KEY ACHIEVEMENTS

The brief was about creating promotional material for the Teach Tech programme. The programme was created to provide courses and opportunities for the community within the Mildmay ward. What I've learned from this experience is the importance time management.

The brief for the London Village Network project was to create and develop ideas for a quarterly publication focused on young londoners. My role was to design content layouts for the magazine using tools such as Adobe InDesign and Photoshop. The magazine will report on issues ranging from lifestyle, fashion and society. The biggest challenge I faced was absorbing ideas from young people and translating them into visual contents.

The ideas of web banner I designed is for the MildMay Community Center, It's for the website which I was assigned to design the web banner for the site with a creative collective team. What I've learned from this project is that having skills such as being creative visually and having knowledge about HTML, CSS is so essential for web coding/web designing.

DBLG - Graphic Designer

DBLG is a small creative agency, where I was given the opportunity to design my own personal logo as a project which was to come up with a story board showing the progress and process of my design. I also had to do various research on logo designs before I came up with a final design and turned it into a 3D logo through a 3D printer from DBLG.

Street league Sports Charity - Graphic Designer(Intern)

I was given tasks to design posters and magazines to create, design and research about, such as films etc. I also learned how a small magazine company works hand in hand with other departments with the magazine business, such as PR team, Editor teams and more on how they handle their clients and so forth. I also learned in the Graphic Design team/ department on what they design magazines (specifically sports magazines).
